From the outer fringes of the lunatic right, they may look similar, but you should try and get it into your head that socialist believe in universal sufferage and work within the rules of parlimentary democracy, where communists believe in "the leading role of the party" and don't give people outside the party any voice in government.

This is a significant difference between the two systems, and if you can't see it, your opinion isn't worth worrying about.

Also, socialism does nto outlaw all private ownership, whereas Communism allows little or no private property aisde from specifically-personal items (clothes, chachkis, etc.).

"Communism" is just being brough up to revive the corpse of knee-jerk McCarthyism.

Whatever,Obama has many close associations and relatinnships with people who hate the United States of America.
That shows a very poor judgement,and/or his own dislike of the USofA.

country or been indifferent to it, he would have headed off to Canada (as many did). In fact he loved it enough to take considerable risks in a fairly quixotic campaign to bring it to its senses, exposing himself to Nixon's dirty tricks campaign in the process.

Unlike the Alasks Independence Group, whose spokesperson (Vogel) says on hos website that they "have no use for America and its institutions". IIRC the "first dood" s a member, and Palin sent a very nice warmfuzzy–touchyfeellie taped speech to their convention last year (it's on YuoTUBE for any who care enough to listen).

American right–wingers have a distinctly repulsive tendency to believe that their vision of the way America ought to work is the only valid vision, and go on to claim that other Americans having a different point of view are trying to destroy the country – rather than perfect it – and are motivated by hatred of the country, rather than some kind of reforming zeal.

Backed up by huge, and increasing, stockpiles of guns, ammo, and yes, explosives.

Don't forget that the ultra–right–wingers also have a very specific and narrow definition of who is and is not a "real American". They don't even care if you lost half your body as a Soldier in Battle doign military service – all they care about is that you're "the same as they are".

This is a remarkably stupid point of view, but right–wingers aren't strong on rational analysis.
