Why not ask the 'who created God' question
and get into an infinite
Russian Doll situation.

Anyone who can believe in one of 200+
'supreme beings' has to be an utter simpleton.

That many ! Good Lord ! ;~)

As in the video link above, Richard Dawkins make the statement well.

"I see You are sincere, but You are delusional"

I sadly have to say I didn't see through it until I was 8 and science was the reason. Make of that what you will. Mind you, my Mum was very 'Churchy', her only real flaw IMHO.

Graham

I think it's bizarre that some electronic designers accept and believe in a wacky sky daddy and there once was a boat full of animals and a talking serpent near a hazardous tree.

Someone that believes in that stuff would make me nervous if they're supposed to design safe control electronics for nuclear power plants.

If I were conducting a job interview for nuclear power plant control it could be like this:

Can you design electronics for nuclear power control?

Yup.

Are you an atheist

Yup.

You have the job..

Alternatively...

You christian?

Yup.

Sorry..but you'll have to believe harder that you'll get the next opening.

It's probably an illegal interview question but I think it's important.

But then the Christian you turned away would design a superior control for less money than yours, put you out of business, and end up being your boss. And then in 2000 years he'll be roasting marshmallows for smores over the fire that you're burning in!
