

Re: An electro-political rant

---

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.repair/2007-07/msg01235.html>

---

- From: sparky <sparky12x@xxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Thu, 26 Jul 2007 16:49:18 -0700
-

On Jul 24, 9:37 am, Meat Plow <m...@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

On Mon, 23 Jul 2007 18:02:02 -0700, ZZactly wrote:

I don't really know where to start.

I think I shall start with this – Since big business bought our government, it seems like it is open season on the American consumer. I mean that 100% and invite anyone to refute it.

These people are not stupid either. Take the example of the Protron 30 or 32" LCD. You can't get a power supply for it. The name Protron appears nowhere on the power supply. It's made by yHI and has a completely an independent model number.

Now, if I were in charge of yHI I would make a bunch of extras and just stow them away. Unless the contract specifically prohibits me from doing so I would do it. Then just wait several months. Those power supplies that they jewed you down to $40 each on, people are willing to pay $150 now because they got this $800 TV that doesn't work. (no offense intended to Jews, that is a figure of speech)

Why wouldn't yHI make some spares and just sell them later ? I can think of only one reason. They agreed not to.

Does this cross the line into conspiracy ?

Re: An electro-political rant

How long will it be before nobody can repair anything ?

A lot of off brand LCD/Plasma etc is basically like buying a disposable camera.

Please advise us as to which brands you believe are NOT off-brands with unavailable parts. I can't really think of any which are affordable by the average consumer, only government offices.