And you expected them to include a service manual with schematics and step-by-step repair instructions? Of course these things are considered disposable. If the mfg. can save 0.01 cent on the cost, that's significant. It's not like they stuck a couple Alkalines and said they aren't replaceable. This is a rechargeable batter which should last a reasonable length of time.

Would you please define your phrase 'reasonable' in terms of time.

Why didn't they print onto the box
'Usable during a period of <reasonable> <eg years>' ?
