Oh, I know exactly who you are.

You're Marc Jason Dannenberg. You grew up in the Bronx. You and your wife Laura now now live in Malaga, Spain, where you manage the finances of the Marbella Stars baseball team and you run "MD Marketing, S.L.", a business entity through which you solicit people to invest in penny stock scams for a cut of the take. And you lost your securities dealer license for illegal activity with one of your clients' money (and leaving threatening messages on his phone). This information is all out there on the Internet, pulicly available to anyone who cares to look.

What you may not realize is that the people running these penny stock scams are playing you for a fool. They feed you a few tidbits of info, invite you to a technology demonstration, etc., and get you hooked, then you go out and lie through your teeth to get people to invest. You get to keep some of the proceeds, but most of it goes to the guys at the top. When/if such scams come crashing down, it's rarely the people at the top who take the fall -- they've usually covered their asses by staying technically legal, but just barely. Most often, it's the rubes at the bottom (such as yourself), who go out into the community and say/do whatever it takes to get people to invest who take the fall because you are the one doing the active solicitation and benefitting from it financially.

There's little doubt you will eventually go down. Or perhaps you do realize your position in these scams, and you're living in Spain to avoid extradition/prosecution?
