Yeah, but we listen to your quotes on NPR, even when the boss gets more air time.

Keep up the good work. If I was in the neighborhood, I'd buy a beer and ask how it felt to sit and wait for the inevitable to happen. Been there and done that, not on this scale though, the body count I live with is just two. It isn't fun. The stray thought still pops up 30 years later .. if maybe they'd have listened.

Hope your gang won't have to deal with much of that. Of course the idiots out there never give you the humanity to care. They are probably projecting themselves and lack of humanity ;-) Try to ignore them.

I find it ironic that the people who care and try to make the world a safer place get a ration of crap from the people who sat back and didn't care or worry until it was too late.
