mind.

Faith healers; snake oil salesman; Orgon Generators; blood zappers;
Cell salts cults; Some <not all> herbal curatives.

Add: Crystal healers, magnetic medical bracelets, etc.

Oh, mate the funniest thing I ever saw was a magazine that had an "expose" on power lines, and how the government was hiding the fact that the magnetic fields generated from power lines were causing cancer, and bipolar disorder and other illnesses in children.

Then on the inside back cover, they were selling the therapeutic benefits of pillows bedsheets and mattresses with magnets in them.

There is a huge difference between a magnet and an alternating magnetic field, such as that produced around power lines, but one would not expect a dullard like you to appreciate that. The funniest thing I ever saw was one of those right wing preacher's magazine. "God is coming to save us" but you need to buy one of these thermo–nuclear shelters.

BWAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA.

Do they make nuclear shelters the size of Noah's ark? WTF does he think they are going to be eating in a post–nuclear world? They obviously know no science at all.
