Therefore we can conclude that the that the extra heat reaching the earth's surface due to the reduction in aerosols is more than sufficient to cause all the warming that occurred during the 1990s. There is no room whatsoever for any warming by CO2, All the warming during the 1990s could have been caused by the the reduction in aerosols.

In that case are you suggesting ...

- (a) CO2 has not increased markedly in the last 100 years (Hawaii figures are false) or
- (b) CO2 is not a greenhouse gas?

Last I heard was that aerosols had NOT yet started to decrease: radiation data from old, still working, geostationary satellites must allow for their drift away from their original longitude.
