

Return (1) and return (2)

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.lang.japan/2004-07/0093.html>

---

From: Konrad Den Ende (chamster_at_home.com)

Date: 07/01/04

Date: Fri, 2 Jul 2004 01:56:11 +0200

I checked my dictionary and found out that:

- 1) む, 返, 戻 is "return", while
- 2) む, 返, 戻½ is "return".

Now, i understand it's "TO return" in the first case while the other is more "A return" (or maybe, returning-ish). What i'd like to know is how the dictionary tries to tell me which is which (i use a case when i have full control to exemplify my issue).

In the first case i see a D and an S bordered by a rectangle each while in the other case there's an C and an U. Is somebody here willing to shed some light onto this? What are those letters ment to tell me? What else to expect?

--

Kindly
Konrad

-----
May all spammers die an agonizing death; have no burial places;
their souls be chased by demons in Gehenna from one room to another for all eternity and more.
Sleep - thing used by ineffective people
          as a substitute for coffee Ambition - a poor excuse for not having enough sense to be lazy
-----