You should know better than to ask questions like that – someone might actually answer.

Sakura is a her, and it's not half bad as anime goes.

Or to put it another way a fair bit under half the series _was_ bad. (I stopped watching at around episode 46 and picked it up again at around 68). It's your basic 'collection' type anime with typically one major battle per episode and it rates about 8.5 out of 10 on the fluffy-ometer. The implementation was quite good but one of the main characters was so intensely annoying that I just couldn't take it (no prizes for guessing about when that character came on-stage). It's 'well known' in certain circles for alleged paedophilic tendencies but that's very firmly a "mind of the beholder" thing.

See? You've got the plot already. Although frankly the reason behind the plot was pretty flimsy.
