By the way Alba Longa was never another name for Rome, it was really another town.
AFAIK.

Golly gosh, what a surprise! :-)

Dear Paul, I was not saying this for _you_ but for the person who stated:

"With this entry we learn that the ancient and older name of ROME was ALBA LONGA ...."

And because this same allingus explains us al the time that all civilisations on Earth originated from the Turks, two questions:

– How old are the oldest known written documents of any turkish-related language?

Orkhun inscriptions in Mongolia to 8th century AD

– Has any turkish-related language ever had an own alphabet?

Re: The ancient name of the city of "ROME" was "KIZIL ALMA"

Yes, the above mentioned inscriptions are believed to be their own alphabet.

Thanks
