You like to brag about your qualifications.

You seem to use a definition of your own for "bragging". I am wise enough to admit my ignorance, and to try to learn when I qualify.

Don't they include a library card?

Regrettably, not every university has a department of Oriental or Semitic studies. This implies, that not every university library has the specific books, materials, or collections.

Re: Superb response to crackpottery

Does your library not provide access to JSTOR?

And it ought to realize that the JAOS is one of the principal journals in the field, and there _are_ Orientalists in Finland. (Its remit includes the study of all of pre-Modern Asia.)

I am quite aware that there are Orientalists in Finland, but AFAIK they are all in Helsinki.

Does that mean that your university, wherever it may be, does not subscribe to JSTOR?
