On the contrary, what he said is perfectly straightforward. Anyone who thinks that there's a close semantic connection between 'to roll about' and 'to swim', for instance, has no business complaining about the comparatively small semantic distance between 'to cook' and 'to bake'.

What's wrong with you Brainy?

Of course, there is no close semantic connection between 'roll about' and 'swim', except in sense of movement, and I never said that. I said that there was connection between Serbian words KOBELJANJE (to roll about) and KUPANJE (swimming).

Please, do not falsify my words in the future.

I think, it does not befit you to give a wrong interpretation.
