Yes, there is. Take one of my recent reconstructions, from the evening of last Sunday, not yet six days old, KAL GID SAI or KAL GID pSAI for the goddess of the Underworld (kal) who gave and took (gid) life (sai psai), a goddess appearing in several guises, for example as wholly rhinoceros in the pit of Lascaux, interpreted by Marie E.P. König as goddess of giving and taking life. A polished form of the name, kal -i- psai, would have survived in Homer's Kalypso English Calypso, an awe inspiring goddess living in a spacious cave, singing, weaving her cloth, which could well be a symbol of the web of life ... You can tell me if my reconstructions are possible under the sound laws of PIE, and there is a rich legacy to evaluate them against, Paleolithic art, Homer, ...

You do not know the meaning of the English word "experiment."

Oh no, not again. My understanding of experiment goes along perfectly well with the definition given in Webster's unabridged encyclopedic dictionary of the English language.

They suggest that you stop plaguing us with the results, but "publish" them in newsgroups where they enjoy discussing such things, such as conlang newsgroups.

As long as you lot with all your titles and universities and libraries and publications and conferences and connections can't falsify my reconstructions, I am entitled to go on with my linguistic experiment, here in sci.lang.

That's because what you are doing is constructing a language.

Learn the difference between constructing and re-constructing.

Once again: What is a "Google account"?

If you subscribe to a Google group, you are a member, and if you log in, you can click on My Account. Membership includes an account, and a profile that lists up all your messages, the year, month, day, hour and minute you sent them, and the groups you posted to. The MI5Vic... spammer's account has been banned by Google, there is no more profile available. This goes to show that a Google account and a profile including a detailed list of the messages and groups belong together. Now the criminal is abusing my name and Google identity and filling my account with his crap messages that are listed as my own messages in my profile, feature of my Google account. From this I must conclude that a Google account is not safe anymore.

Google Europe is located in my hometown of Zurich, where they maintain a research center. The first place was five minutes to walk from where I live, the second place is farther away, half an hour to walk, a big old house looking a bit like a castle. They are now transforming the house into a wellness temple, the session room is looking like the hall of a Scottish castle, another room like a chamber in the starship enterprise. Now what is more important, transforming a working place into a wellness temple, or maintaining safety standards and make people trust your products?
