Göbekli Tepe? Where the hell did that come from? I was responding to your nonsense about Magdalenian.

The Magdalenian era came to an end in about 12 000 BC, the era of Göbekli Tepe lasted from 11 600 – 9 500 BC. The first stone pillar temples were built around 11 600 BC, and all the temples were carefully filled up and abandoned in around 9 500 BC. We know that Magdalenian tribes wandered eastward by the end of the Magdalenian period of time, and the gap of some 400 years between the approximate end of the Magdalenian epoch in the Franco–Cantabrian space in around 12 000 BC and the begin of Neolithic I in southeast Anatolia in around 11 600 BC could well have been filled by a wandering tribe of elite artists.

Yes, I know you do. It's what's known as "making things up".

If I made things up you could easily falsify my reconstructions. But you can't, nor can Prof. Dr. Nathan Sanders, nor can Peter T. Daniels, nor can anyone else in sci.lang, therefore I feel entitled to go on with my experiment. And you won't deny that Semitic an-aku and Latin ego are akin?
