Jang Min Han as the Next Bill Gates?

Microsoft Corporation is the worldwide leader in software, services and solutions that help people and businesses realize their full potential. Gates and his partner Paul Allen worked together to developed software for personal computers. With their drive and passionate belief that the computer would be a valuable tool on every office desktop and in every home, they were able to succeed.

Today, we have the internet that is invaluable tool that allows us to search, download and communicate with others. So, if we can successfully communicate with one another through the internet, why do we still need phones? The reason is because we have yet to develop a successful way of incorporating both requirements. As we speak, it is rumored that in China that Jang Min Han is very close to achieving what many believe to be impossible. With the foresight that Bill Gates once had, he too is on his way of developing a system which would make stationary telephones antiquated. He may very well revolutionize the world by making it easier and less costly for the world by making the internet possible for verbal communication with every and any person in the world. He may very well be the Next Bill Gates.
