I'm sorry to point out, but you're doing that irritating thing again of responding line by line rather than reading my post with at least enough context to get to the next line before you go "???" or whatever.

I'm sorry, I hope you don't expect me to change that (bad) habit. Try to get over it. (I'm sure things could be worse than that.)

What is worse is not the point. And I only expect that you'll do whatever suits you. I'm just saying that when you post in that manner (especially when you're not paying attention to my own posts; see my previous post), my appetite for conversation is a lot less.

P.S. I'll try to keep your complains in mind (when reading your posts) – but please don't expect too much. Thanx in advance.

Thanks for that. I mean, sure I know I make mistakes – both typos and plain errors of fact and reasoning – but ordinarily my posts do deserve to be read for the details I include and not brushed over with "???"s and stuff like that right in the middle of a developing train of thought. It's not like I'm some crank posting line by line nonsense.

Anyway, overall, I do very much appreciate our conversations and your help (which has been generous), knowledge, and enthusiasm for the great subject of mathematical logic, set theory, and mathematics.
