

Re: Woman steals 1997 dissertation

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.math/2005-09/msg01124.html>

- From: Timothy Murphy <tim@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Tue, 06 Sep 2005 02:18:16 +0100
-

Ronald Bruck wrote:

> Of course, most [all?] graduate schools have strict limits on how long > you can be in a degree program. I think the 10+ students are switching > schools, sometimes multiple times.
>
> Still, a department shouldn't accept such students.

Why?

They don't seem to me to do much harm.
My university now has incredibly strict rules –
a PhD has to be completed within 5 years,
with no exceptions except certified insanity.

There used to be lots of perpetual students who had been researching unknown French poets for 15 years.
They paid their fees, and treated the university as a kind of haven from the chaos outside.

"This man decided not to Live but Know" (Browning)

—

Timothy Murphy
e-mail (<80k only>): tim /at/ birdsnest.maths.tcd.ie
tel: +353-86-2336090, +353-1-2842366
s-mail: School of Mathematics, Trinity College, Dublin 2, Ireland
.

- References:
 - ◆ Re: Woman steals 1997 dissertation
◇ From: k wallace
 - ◆ Re: Woman steals 1997 dissertation
◇ From: Lee Rudolph
 - ◆ Re: Woman steals 1997 dissertation
◇ From: Ronald Bruck

Re: Woman steals 1997 dissertation

- Prev by Date: Re: How do you find derivatives in noisy data?
- Next by Date: Re: $\sin x / x$ tends to 1...
- Previous by thread: Re: Woman steals 1997 dissertation
- Next by thread: