I just picked up a book in the local library that is a biography of Coxeter ("The Infinite Mind"). In early pages the author describes Bourbaki as a real person. Now its my impression that Bourbaki is a name adopted by a group of French mathematicians in the early part of the 20th century but I couldn't believe that an author who had gone to the trouble of writing a biography would make such a mistake. Am I missing something. Am I wrong about Bourbaki?
