

Re: Followup – huge uptick in cholesterol

Source: <http://sci.tech–archive.net/Archive/sci.med.cardiology/2004–06/0152.html>

From: Preston Crawford (me_at_prestoncrawford.com)

Date: 06/28/04

Date: Mon, 28 Jun 2004 09:24:48 -0500

On 2004–06–27, Mike <maross@texoma.net> wrote:

> Preston Crawford wrote:

>> Secondly, what does being a Christian have to do anything. I'm a >>Christian, but I wouldn't care if my doctor was an atheist, Buddhist >>or whatever as long as he's a good doctor.

>

> I personally would prefer Christian people around me, whether an > airline pilot, Dr or the people of the city, which I'm bike riding in > (I would probably be killed in most Muslim cities of the world). I > would take odds against President Bush's survival of any procedure in > a Muslim hospital. Mohammed was a conquering murderer that treated > women like slaves and Christ was a healer that revered women. However

Yes. And we all know that ALL Christians have followed in his footsteps.

I'm a Christian myself, but at least I can with open eyes that the majority of God's followers don't really give a damn about WWJD. They treat their fellow man like garbage in spite of, and sometimes BECAUSE OF, their religion.

> most people seem they are no more successful at Christianity than > dieting upon examination of their behaviors or getting on a scale, nor > should you call yourself a Christian or a MD without proper > properties; this has probably been true of the illiterate masses the > last 2k years. Most of America resemble the gluttonous, promiscuous > spectators like Roman Arena days, when Christians where being killed > for entertainment (reality TV, fatherless homes etc). With criminals, > highway accepted murders and general lack of a cohesive social > feeling; it is no wonder people spend most of their time in their > castles watching TV and only venture out in their tanks.

Thanks for proving my point. It's one thing to say you're a Christian.

It's another thing to live it. Thus I really (once again) wouldn't care whether the person treating me was Christian, Atheist, Buddhist, etc.

Because in the US the chances of getting a compassionate Christian are probably worse than getting a compassionate Atheist or Buddhist to treat you medically. And at least they'll bring a measure of objectivity to the table most of the time whereas my experience is that the Christian will sometimes bring a boatload of baggage and bias. And once again, I too am a sci.med.cardiology: Re: Followup – huge uptick in cholesterol

Christian. I just don't like the way my fellow man practices very much.

> Good Luck breaking this plateau and safe biking friend. Mike

Thanks.

Preston