>Yes, I know that is how your mind attempts to control your soul.

And your mind attempts to escape into fantasy by playing 'let's pretend I have something called a soul'.

Where is this 'soul' Andrew?

What is it made of?

Where does it reside?

What are it's attributes?

How do you know you have one?

Do you feel it?

If so, what does it feel like?

And is it possible that these feelings could be attributable to some other explanation?

>Yes, I have found our "conversations" to be delightful but you keep ending >them to recover by meditating.

I'm sorry you continue to be obsessed by the desire to believe you tax me in some way. I have never left our conversations feeling a need to 'recover' or 'meditate'. Your delusions remain.

>May God give you the stamina to continue this as long as you find this >exchange delightful, in Christ's name.

I have much stamina already – no need to conjure a deity – thanks to my daily practice and healthy life.

>Sorry you had bad experiences from the Inquisition. May God heal you, in >Christ's name.

I was not old enough to be a victim of the Inquisition Andrew. Neither was I on any of the many bloody crusades. Yet the point I make is relevant and well made. You are as blind and ignorant in your bigotry and blind faith as the religious 'authorities' were back then.

Perhaps you are an apologist for these atrocities?

Would you have agreed with one of the famous oft quoted commands from one of the sackings of Jerusalem which pronounced 'Kill every single man woman and child within these city walls – if any are truly innocent then it does not matter as God will know and He will save them". ???

I think your pot/kettle interface is malfunctioning again here!!! :-)

My advice – stick to cardiology and not neurology.

I'm sorry to see your senses aren't working very well.

In yourself? Perhaps you should try some meditation to refresh your mind my dear friend.
