4 Years of KKKerry = 4 SCORE Years of LIBERAL judges

Are you a member of the Bush/Cheney base?

If 4 years of KKKerry isn't frightening enough, think of KKKerry's LIFETIME appointment of LIBERAL judges to the Federal Courts!

The Bush/Cheney Base

My fellow Americans:

America is at a cross-roads between Good and Evil. As General Tommy Franks so eloquently said, we must "choose wisely." Do NOT waste time arguing with Demon-KKK-Rats = Terrorists! Please get the word out to the friends of President George W. Bush, which include but are not limited to:

- * Christians
- * Our brave Soldiers, Sailors, Airpersons, Marines, Coastguardpersons, and Veterans
- * Our finest Law Enforcement, Firefighters, and other First Responders
- * Senior Citizens
- * Soccer Moms and Other Women
- * Sportspersons and other Gun Owners
- * Taxpayers

U.S. Supreme Court in the Balance

It took a bare majority of the U.S. Supreme Court to reverse and enjoin the anti-Christian, anti-life Florida Supreme Court from changing the voting rules in the 2000 Presidential Election.

Billions of lives, especially those of unborn babies, will literally hang in the balance in the years ahead. The next President of the United States will appoint at least five [5] justices to the U.S. Supreme Court, not to mentions hundreds of vacancies in the U.S. Courts of Appeals and U.S. District Courts. It is and will be our Christian duty to vote for politicians who believe and fear God --- not those who believe and fear dirty muslim terrorists!

Vote Bush/Cheney!

Non + Nein + No = KKKerry

So much for "cooperation" from KKKerry's racist Old European "friends": both the French Frogs and the Sour Krauts have promised NO COOPERATION even in the unlikely event that KKKerry wins.

Australia has also said NO to Liberals = Terrorists.

No means No, John "Flip Flop" KKKerry!

TotalFinaElf = KKKerry's + Saddam's French Friends

4 Years of KKKerry = 4 SCORE Years of LIBERAL judges

Kim Housego. Alaska Oil and Gas Reporter: Industry News. "TotalFinaElf weathers the storms." 2003/01/14.

PARIS — As TotalFinaElf has aggressively searched for new oil fields to explore, it hasn't been deterred by controversy.

The French energy giant has provoked outrage in other countries by doing business with such pariahs as Iran and Myanmar. And the world's fourth-largest oil group has positioned itself to profit when Iraq is free of U.N. sanctions.

"We have to go where the oil and gas is," said Christophe de Margerie, executive vice president in charge of exploration and production. "Though not at any cost."

The secret behind Total's success has been its exploration program.

It has the widest geographical spread of any major oil company and has made some of the biggest oil and gas discoveries over the last decade, notably in Angola, Iran, Venezuela and Kazakhstan — where costs are lower and profits are higher.

The company plans to open an office in Anchorage and has begun participating in recent Alaska lease sales.

The company's assertive stance has allowed it to surpass its larger competitors. While industry giants ExxonMobil Corp., Royal Dutch/Shell and BP PLC have downgraded oil production targets amid tumbling profits, Total says it's on track to lift output by 10 percent this year.

"TotalFinaElf has been able to expand production and, above all, do it profitably," said John Parry, analyst at U.S.-based petroleum consultancy John S. Herold.

The company posted net profits of $4.65 billion in the first nine months of this year, down from the same period in 2001 but still in line with expectations.

Total's expansion into politically sensitive countries has angered the United States and human rights groups.

The company brushed aside U.S. objections and invested heavily in Iran during the mid-1990s, then insulated itself from the threat of U.S. sanctions by selling its American activities.

At the same time, it opened negotiations with Saddam Hussein's government to develop two vast oil fields under the Iraqi sands once the United Nations lifts sanctions imposed after the Gulf War.

Elsewhere, Total has angered separatist rebels in the disputed Western Sahara by signing a contract with Morocco to develop an offshore oil rig.

Does expanding into unstable countries not leave the company more vulnerable to Third World political risks such as coup d'etats, nationalization or terrorism?

De Margerie, who sees Total's diversity as one of its greatest assets, says no.

"We split our risks," he said in an interview at Total's headquarters just outside Paris. "No one country has such an exposure that it would put our company at stake."

Furthermore, de Margerie said rising demand over the next 20 years means oil companies will need to find much more oil but "it's not easy to find new opportunities, it's a big fight."

"When we see new opportunities we are very aggressive," he said. "But we will never operate in a country unless we are certain we can uphold our rules of conduct and respect the laws."

That wasn't the case in Myanmar, according to labor unions who lodged a complaint in a French court in August alleging the company used forced labor during the construction of a pipeline there. Total denies any wrongdoing.

De Margerie rejected calls by some rights groups for Total to leave the country because of the ruling junta's poor human rights record, citing the company's commitments to local communities there.

Asked about Iran, de Margerie said Washington's decision to bar U.S. companies from doing business there did not apply to Total.

Now the company is focused on Iraq. It is anxious for the opportunity to develop vast new energy deposits in a post-Saddam Iraq. But it also fears that two tentative agreements it has signed with Saddam's regime could be voided by U.S.-led military action.

"The contracts ... would be a major addition to the French company by giving them access to cheap oil," said Dr. Fadhil Chalabi, director of the Center for Global Energy Studies in London. "Therefore it is essential for them to secure these two agreements."

Iraq has the second-largest proven oil reserves on the planet — an estimated 112 billion barrels — just after Saudi Arabia. And that is just what is known.

"We would like to develop those fields as soon as possible," de Margerie said.

Total, formed two years ago in the merger of Total Fina and the former state-owned oil company Elf Aquitaine, has also had to contend with damage to its reputation at home.

Total Fina first took a beating after an aging tanker it contracted sank off France's Brittany coast in 1999. Some 10,000 tons of gluey oil washed up on the country's beaches.

Two years later, an explosion in a TotalFinaElf subsidiary's fertilizer factory killed 30 people, injured hundreds, and damages scores of buildings in the southern city of Toulouse.

A year ago, activists removed window panes from a chateau belonging to the group's chairman to protest the disaster. TotalFinaElf, France's biggest company, is responding, de Margerie said.

"We have taken new measures to ensure maximum possible security," he said, adding that the company would invest $500 million in additional precautions over the next four years. "We must be more transparent and less defensive."

Mark Steyn. National Post. "Welcome to Anglo-Saxon reality."

<http://www.nationalpost.com/home/story.html?id=A60E3CF1-EEB1-46A6-9A83-1F2E7B015CAB>

Twice in recent columns, Diane Francis has mentioned, almost en passant, a curious little fact:

The Western oil company with the closest ties to the late Saddam is France's TotalFinaElf. That's not the curious fact, that's just business as usual in the Fifth Republic. This is the curious fact: As Diane wrote in February and again last week, "Total's biggest shareholder is Montreal's Paul Desmarais, whose youngest son is married to Prime Minister Jean Chretien's daughter."

Let's see if I've got this straight: TotalFinaElf's largest shareholder is a subsidiary of Montreal's Power Corp, whose co-chief executive is Jean Chretien's son-in-law, Andre Desmarais. Mr. Desmarais' brother, Paul Desmarais Jr., sits on the Total board.

For months, the anti-war crowd has insisted that "it's all about oil," that the only reason the Iraqi people were being "liberated" was so that the second biggest oil reserves in the world could be annexed in perpetuity by Dick Cheney and Halliburton and the rest of Bush's Texas oilpatch gang. Instead, it turns out that, if it is all about oil, then the principal North American beneficiary of the continued enslavement of the Iraqi people is the family of the Canadian Prime Minister — that's to say, his daughter, France Chretien, and his grandchildren.

What a delightful footnote to the Chretien–Chiraquiste war effort. This is a victory not just for the Iraqi people but for "Anglo–Saxon" reality over Franco–Canadian postmodern cynicism.

G'day, mates! Australia Says NO to Liberals = Terrorists!

Australia, America's loyal ally in the war on terrorism has spoken; it's the votes that count; and Conservative John Howard has been re–elected!

George W. Bush and the Party of Lincoln will likewise beat the crap out of John KKKerry this November!

Advance Australia Fair

Australians all let us rejoice,
For we are young and free;
We've golden soil and wealth for toil;
Our home is girt by sea;
Our land abounds in nature's gifts
Of beauty rich and rare;
In history's page let every stage
Advance Australia Fair.
In joyful strains let us sing,
Advance Australia Fair.

Beneath our radiant Southern Cross
We'll toil with hearts and hands;
To make this Commonwealth of ours
Renowned of all the lands;
For those who've come across the seas
We've boundless plains to share;
With courage let us all combine
To Advance Australia fair.
In joyful strains let us sing,
Advance Australia Fair.

United States of America
Australia–United States Relations

Australia has long been a close friend and security ally of the United States. At no time in the history of our two countries have relations been stronger than they are today. The common values we share and our historical and cultural bonds underpin the enduring strength of our defence and security alliance. The United States is Australia's most important economic partner. Our trade and investment links will deepen under the Australia–United States Free Trade Agreement (FTA).

KKKerry undermining a key ally -- Australia

By Charles Krauthammer
Washington Post Writers Group

WASHINGTON -- Of all our allies in the world, which is the only one to have joined the United States in the foxhole in every war in the past 100 years? Not Britain, not Canada, certainly not France. The answer is Australia.

Australia not only shares a community of values with the United States, it understands that its safety rests ultimately on a stable international structure that, in turn, rests not on parchment treaties but on the power and credibility of the United States. Which is why Australia is with us today in both Afghanistan and Iraq.

Australian Prime Minister John Howard has taken great risks and much political heat for his support of America. There is a national election in Australia on Oct. 9, and the race is neck and neck between Howard and Labor Party leader Mark Latham. Latham has pledged to withdraw from Iraq.

This is a critical election not only for Australia but also for the United States. Think of the effect on America, its front-line soldiers and its coalition partners if one of its closest allies turns tail and runs.

The terrorists are well aware of this potential effect. Everyone knows about the train bombing in Madrid that successfully brought down a pro-American government and led to Spain's precipitous withdrawal from Iraq. But few here noticed that this month's car bombing in Jakarta was designed to have precisely the same effect.

Where was the bomb set off? At the Australian embassy. When was it set off? Just weeks before the Australian election and just three days before the only televised debate between Howard and Latham.

The terrorists' objective is to intimidate all countries allied with America. Make them bleed and tell them this is the price they pay for being a U.S. ally. The implication is obvious: Abandon America and buy your safety.

That is what the terrorists are saying. Why is the Kerry campaign saying the same thing? "John Kerry's campaign has warned Australians that the Howard government's support for the U.S. in Iraq has made them a bigger target for international terrorists." So reports The Australian (Sept. 18).

Americans Overseas for Kerry is the Kerry operation for winning the crucial votes of Americans living abroad (remember the Florida recount?), including more than 100,000 who live in Australia. Its leader was interviewed Sept. 16 by The Australian's Washington correspondent, Roy Eccleston. Asked if she believed the terrorist threat to Australians was now greater because of the support for President Bush, she replied: "I would have to say that," noting that "the most recent attack was on the Australian embassy in Jakarta."

She said this of her country (and of the war that Australia is helping us with in Iraq): "We are endangering the Australians now by this wanton disregard for international law and multilateral channels." Mark Latham could not have said it better. Nor could Jemaah Islamiah, the al-Qaida affiliate that killed 11 people in the Jakarta bombing.

This Kerry spokesman, undermining a key ally on the eve of a critical election, is no rogue political operative. She is the head of Americans Overseas for Kerry — Diana Kerry, sister to John.

She is, of course, merely echoing her brother, who, at a time when American allies have shown great political courage in facing down both terrorists and domestic opposition for their assistance to the United States in Iraq, calls these allies the "coalition of the coerced and the bribed."

This snide and reckless put-down not only undermines our best friends abroad, it demonstrates the cynicism of Kerry's promise to broaden our coalition in Iraq. If this is how Kerry repays America's closest allies — ridiculing the likes of Tony Blair and John Howard — who does he think is going to step up tomorrow to be America's friend?

The only thing that distinguishes Kerry's Iraq proposals from Bush's is his promise to deploy his unique, near-mystical ability to bring in new allies to fight and pay for the war in Iraq — to "make Iraq the world's responsibility" and get others to "share the burden," as he said this week at New York University.

Yet even Richard Holbrooke, a top Kerry foreign policy adviser, admits that the president of France is not going to call up President Kerry and say, "How many divisions should I send to Iraq?"

Nor will anyone else. Kerry abuses America's closest friends while courting those, like Germany and France, that have deliberately undermined America before, during and after the war. What lessons are leaders abroad to draw from this when President Kerry asks them — pretty please — to put themselves on the line for the United States?

The Case of Anne Marie Murphy: Are Pregnant Irish Girls Bombs?

What Demon-KKK-Rats like "Chappaquidick" Kennedy don't want you to know

Soccer Moms! Remember the poor Irish girl who was knocked up by an arab sub-animal immigrant and then sent on a plane with (unbeknownst to her) a bomb set to explode in flight. Thankfully, the plot, which was pre-9/11 and yet another example of muslim terrorism, was foiled thanks to excellent Israeli intel and profiling. See CBS 60 Minutes II, "Profiling dirty arab terrorists works," 2002/01/16; see also, BBC News, "Foiling dirty arabs," 2002/07/05.

"In 1986, Anne Marie Murphy, a young Irish woman, was planning to take an El Al flight from London to Tel Aviv to meet the parents of her fiance, a Palestinian. Murphy, who was pregnant, had no idea that the man she was planning to marry had hidden plastic explosives and a detonator in one of her suitcases. Israeli profilers interviewing Murphy found out about her boyfriend, got suspicious, and then discovered the bomb before the jumbo jet took off."

"[S]ecurity experts ... point to an attempt in 1986 by a Jordanian to send his Irish girlfriend on to an El Al flight with a bomb concealed in her hand luggage without her knowledge. / The woman, Anne-Marie Murphy, was preparing to board an Israel-bound flight at London's Heathrow airport, when she was quizzed by a ticket agent trained to screen passengers. / Since the agent thought her story didn't add up, screeners re-examined her baggage, which an X-ray had cleared and found seven pounds of explosives in the lining."
