Daley, who told reporters his city had offered emergency, medical and technical help as early as last Sunday to FEMA but was turned down. Only a single tank truck was requested, Daley said. Red tape kept the American Ambulance Association from sending 300 emergency vehicles from Florida to the flood zone, according to former senator John Breau (D-La.) They were told to get permission from the General Services Administration. "GSA said they had to have FEMA ask for it," Breau told CNN. "As a result they weren't sent".

Total control yields total paralysis.

Perhaps enabling local response is the way to go.

If you see a problem fix the MTF.
