I guess it's getting old by now with the millions of people taking statins and 90% complaining of side effects and the number one complaint is muscle problems. Now, I may be missing something here, but if muscles are the problem, is not the heart a major muscle in the body with intricate muscle fiber controlling the inner working parts such as valves. I find it strange the number of heart murmurs surfacing through out the country and a ho-hum attitude by the medical field. I think there is a definite connection between statins, heart murmurs, and other related heart problems.

Are you basing this on legitimate scientific research or wishful thinking?
