It seems to me I heard somewhere that Andrew B. Chung, MD/PhD wrote in article <bp7rq456uvgt2g16oh3qmm759s50uc9bf5@xxxxxxx>:

convicted neighbor Don Kirkman wrote:

The same reason He provided a global flood in the past.

That little thing in the Near East where the Mediterranean overran the Black Sea and wiped out some shoreline villages?

No.

Your PhD doctor John Baumgardner is/was a trained scientist, with a specialty in electrical engineering. He apparently has had no training in the biblical languages or cultures, nor in the history of the near east. Upon becoming a Christian and renouncing evolution, he set out to explain the mechanism of the Global Flood.

Like other PhDs who have renounced science and logic, he began with the belief that there was a Global Flood and set out to find geophysical ways to explain it. IOW, he stopped being a scientist and became a creationist and a Biblical literalist. Like other straying PhDs, he proposes as fact theories that have only assumptions and inferences, not credible evidence, to support them.

BTW, the local flood I referred to does have some physical evidence behind it. Differential saline gradients have been measured in the various levels of the Black Sea—evidence suggesting a mixture of fresh water in the original lack and sea water from the Mediterranean pouring in through the Hellespont. There is also evidence of ancient dwellings now far below the current surface of the lake.

"During the Ice Age of the Pleistocene epoch, the level of the Black Sea rose, and the sea was connected to the Mediterranean and Caspian seas several times. But in the postglacial period the Black Sea contracted, became a freshwater sea, and its water level fell below that of the ocean. The Strait of Bosphorus was formed 6,000–8,000 years ago. The salt water of the Mediterranean Sea entered the Black Sea and filled its basin. It destroyed the freshwater fauna of the Black Sea, which came to be replaced by the saltwater fauna of the Mediterranean Sea. The sea level rose, and the salt water flooded the lower parts of the river valleys, creating estuaries."
