No amount of your misconstruing, misinterpreting, misunderstanding, misanthropy will turn what I wrote into judging rather than stating observable facts. The rest of what you wrote is extremely old news.

You struck out with "judging" so now you're going to try "critical."

Your being critical of others does mean you have judged them.

I AM is being critical of you, doc. But you seem to think making judgments and criticisms is necessarily a bad thing. I guess the idea of something being constructive and useful never occurs to you.

"Dr." Chung is caught in an unsolvable and psychology/intellect busting dichotomy. As a professional, he must keep the most rational, calm and objective scientifically minded attitude. But, as can be seen by his frequent spam in this and other newsgroups, his psyche is shattered by the blind elevation of religious metaphor, superstition and belief.

In my opinion this manifests as profound self doubt and inability to cope with his objective reality – perhaps he has lost patients but this conflicts with his overweening, in my opinion, self gratifying ego. In order to avoid self criticism and condemnation he then subconsciously elevates himself to be a major friend of Jesus, thus absolving himself of all guilt and reinforcing his pathological ego gratification and overconfidence.

He then utilizes the objections and criticisms leveled against him in these newsgroups in order to assume the mantle of the persecuted martyr, fighting against "convicted neighbors" and others. It is OBVIOUS that this helps to maintain reinforce his already fragile psychology. In order to do this, he needs to shut off introspection and override his reason which is easily accomplished with the "Jesus is LORD" mantra, effectively disconnecting his rational facultative and logical faculties and bathing himself in a short circuit of self reinforced ego reinforcement. Unfortunately, as with all short circuits, the FUSE EVENTUALLY BLOWS.
