

Re: Thanksgiving Options

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.dentistry/2004-11/1427.html>

From: Joel M. Eichen (joeleichen_at_yahoo.com)

Date: 11/09/04

Date: Mon, 08 Nov 2004 19:48:48 -0500

On Tue, 09 Nov 2004 00:29:27 GMT, "Chloe" <justsayno@spam.com> wrote:

> "T" <tforms1@yahoo.com> wrote in message > news:3e867a69.0411081441.638de01@posting.google.com...
>>> I suggest an online or print food catalog such as Mission Orchards or >>> Harry >>> and David.
>>
>> I checked out both sites, Harry and David seems to be what Im looking for.
>> But they seem to be pretty expensive.
>>
>>
>>> I got irate with Harry and David about 3 years ago when they >>> failed to process an online order I placed, and I don't buy from them >>> anymore.
>> You dont buy from them because of the screw up with the orders?
>> What did you think of their products? Any in particular you >> liked/disliked?
>>
>>> But I never had a problem with ordering from the print catalog by >>> phone. Their business exists for just the type of thing you're wanting to >>> accomplish.
>> I'll probably order over the phone.

REPLY

Anyone have a good recipe for making beer-can turkey ... or maybe deep-fried turkey? What do you use? Peanut oil or something?

Joel

>>
>> Thanks!
>
> I have a pretty low tolerance for mixups like the one I encountered, even > though it did seem to be isolated to their web site. Their failure to ship > some business related holiday gifts caused me a lot of embarrassment, more > than just inconvenience, so it left a bad taste (so to speak <g>). I've sci.med.dentistry: Re: Thanksgiving Options

- >always found their quality to be good, though. Can't think of specifics, but*
- >I think fruit is generally appreciated as a gift especially when it arrives*
- >ripe. So much of what's in the grocery nowadays is i*