But babies don't really see anything clearly, especially not faces for many months ... at about eight months of age, they become afraid of everyone ... why? It is the first time they've ever really seen a new and unfamiliar face clearly. In the past everyone was a blur and babies feared not the face of a stranger. Suddenly at about eight months of age, everyone is a stranger for a little while and then JME's point picks up and takes over.

Amazing place, this smd!
