

Re: curozone

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.dentistry/2005-02/0593.html>

From: StovePipe (StovesNewAddy_at_sympatico.DOTnet)

Date: 02/06/05

Date: Sun, 6 Feb 2005 03:50:44 -0500

Alexander Vasserman DDS <purple543210@yahoo.ca> wrote:

> I'm not buying this over priced machine. I am also not buying the > biolase.

Well, if you change your mind, make sure it's a NEW one and get at least FIVE years' worth of service in writing. That'll fix their (Steve Jobs) asses for them...

> There is a very good case posed at DT showing photos of what can easily > happen to anyone.

Rememdy: NEVER turn off your water. Period.

> I do not believe there is vested interest in this machine by those > presenters mentioned.

Al, he personally knows the inventor (some guy just north of Toronto, who sold the patent to the Irish professor dude who published the only studies to date). <RB> has been implicated in the development from the get-go; he even SAID so... I interpret that to mean he is a major share holder in the manufacturing company.... In the Toronto meeting, he spent well-neigh 90 minutes on the HealOzone. I find it curious that he brandishes his other well-researched products (with good reason) and then he turns around and pushes this thing, with so little research behind it. What he should be doing, IMO, is giving U of T and the London schools some units for research purposes, and let them do independent studies, with microscopy, etc.

You could try phoning some of your old colleagues in the Toronto Dental Society and ask them to tell you honestly if it really does do something useful. Ditto on the IDF. Some of those guys must have some info. Remember also that Krzysztof Polanowski has had it in Poland for a couple of years now, and he does not believe that it is worth the investment.

> *They make full disclosures about the other stuff they sell.
> And the stuff they do recommend works for me.*

Re: curozone

sci.med.dentistry: Re: curozone

I agree 100 percent, except for this particular O3 thing. As I said: I bought a few of his composites and stuff, and the Parkell rings, and the microetcher, and ClearFil, etc. No complaints with any of it.

There are now three HealOzones in the Quebec City area, I think, and when I hear some results reported, I'll sing out here.

Cheers

SP

--

Not a real Addy, yet