Jeff Clark is a self-described Am poisoning victim. After he discovered this if I recall correctly he did, as his own business venture go to work for CFS Nutrion part time while working (I believe full time as an engineer) because some of their products like NAC can be helpful in Hg detoxification. You can read about his history and CFS on his website.

I have no idea how much a domain name costs, but the info is being put up by amalgam victims not company reps. .

Why should people volunteering their time such as Jeff Clark have to shoulder all the costs and their time while still recovering from AM poisoning.

So far I have no indication that the posted information is incorrect and CFS nutrition would only benifit if they thought that amalgam toxicity would official be recognized as a national phenommena. Whatever their degree of involvement I think it is more out of confidence in the serious of the issue and some creative armtwisting from Jeffclark. This is just my guess.
