Hi,

This is a followup to a post I made some time back. My wife's old dentist diagnosed her with five (5) crowns. Her new dentist says she needs one (1) crown and two fillings. These reports we're based on the same set of full mouth Xrays. Now I would expect some variation, after all dentists are human, and some cases could be borderline. But this result astounds me. Maybe it shouldn't. In any case, I guess it's a good thing we went for that second opinion. Would reporting this to the state dental board accomplish anything?

Jeff
