Don't know if I understand you correctly. The harm transmitted by the stimulant and mind/body connection to another person is not determined by the stimulant takers condition.

Well Hg can act as a stimulant. Come to think of it they did a show on identical twins once. The twins reported that sometimes they could sense trauma in the other twin when they were miles away in one or two cases. I'm not saying I believed it but that's what these twins had reported on this show. I also know that a few World Chess Champions had concerns about thier opponent transmitting thoughts or trying to hypnotize them during the match , which is why a few always wore sunglasses.

It usually attacks the digestive system OR if there is a weaker part or organ of the body, it will usually settle there for a while, and if that is resolved somewhat, move onto another weak part of the body.

Yup Hg goes through and attacks the digestive tract!
