

Re: sinus lift and bone graft

Source: <http://sci.tech--archive.net/Archive/sci.med.dentistry/2006-06/msg00344.html>

- From: Steven Bornfeld <dentaltwinmung@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Mon, 19 Jun 2006 13:06:37 GMT
-

lizryan wrote:

About nine months ago I had a sinus lift and bone graft done by an oral surgeon. I had to have this done in order to have implants on my top left side. I am supposed to have the implants put in sometimes this summer. After the sinus lift and bone graft I had several follow-up checkups and xrays. The bone graft was a success and I then had plenty of bone for the implants.

Well I thought everything was going along great until last week. I started having a really bad nasal discharge. The discharge was a yellow green color and there were small gray granules in it. This has been going on now for over a week. I called my oral surgeon's office to get an appointment to find out what was going on but he is out of the office for the next 10 days.

Does anyone have any input into my situation and what are the gray granules?
Thanks.

Obviously you're thinking the graft has come through the sinus membrane, but while this seems obvious there's no way to tell. I would save some of these granules for him to see, though.

Steve