I have heard everything from patients having to be hospitalized for the condition versus others doing ok as outpatients. I think it depends on the situation. This discussion could be completed if we could just ask the dentist what he/she was doing at the time of the incident.

but for this case, the tooth was mandibular, correct?

That is what the patient reported. The only thing I can say (until the OP responds) is that my memory of the case reports of NaHClO<sub>3</sub> extrusion were so awful--progressing to noma if memory serves--that the patient's complaint of having to take last Thurs. and Fri. off would have been followed by an even more serious story line.
