

Implants: Funny Sensations

Source: <http://sci.tech--archive.net/Archive/sci.med.dentistry/2006-11/msg00144.html>

- From: nichaywood@xxxxxxxxxx
 - Date: 15 Nov 2006 10:55:30 -0800
-

I will try to keep this short. I have only 13 of my own teeth, due to hypodontia I think! I have had a partial dentures (top and bottom) since I was 21. I am now 28. Last year, I had a bone graft (my own bone, from my hip) and this August just gone, have had 7 implants placed in various places in my jaw. Its now November, 3months since they were placed, and I have started to experience sensations. Two different sorts. The first is like a vibration in my front tooth (which is has a veneer, and is close to where an implant is), it started when I sneezed once, and now its there and getting more prominent, like when I breath/blow my nose! It is not painful, but it is there. The other sensation is just an ache in my jaw, where the implants are. I am not seeing my consultant for another month, and I am concerned that this sensation could be early signs of failure, and should I contact them, or wait till December??

Thanks for any advice.
Nic