

Re: Brain Tumor Symptoms?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.diseases.cancer/2004-07/0113.html>

From: me (no_at_address.com)

Date: 07/10/04

Date: Sat, 10 Jul 2004 19:01:24 +0300

Could it be just tense muscles?

A few years back I got quite a scare when I started having "woozy" and "wavy" feeling in my head. Just like walking on a deck of a ship or a mild hangover. Every day starting in the morning. I went through three doctors until I beleived them: my neck and shoulder muscles havin been tightening real tense due to sitting from of a computer! I do bicycling and nature walks a lot but those muscles just did not get enough exercise. The last doctor sent me to a massage. A month later I was OK again. The uneasy feeling never came back but I've started excercising my muscles more.

idol_wild@hotmail.com (Caseti) wrote:

>Hi

>

>I was hoping someone might be able to clarify something for me.

>Although I'm booked in to see a neurorlogist in a month's time, I'm >curious as to whether anybody else's experience resembles mine.

>

>Basically, I've been getting episodes where I experience burning >and/or tingling sensations in both of my hands, and certain

>'activities' seem to trigger the sensations. The first time it >actually felt as if my left hand had burst into flames, and then the >'fire' spread to my right hand. The first attack occurred 4 months ago >whilst driving. Subsequent attacks have been less 'inflammatory', >although I typically experience burning during the course of the day >for up to 15 seconds at a time. Although the episodes can be quite >painful, I've gotten used to letting them pass.

>

>Most troubling, though, is what happened when I recently had a cold.

>The coughing seemed to 'trigger' minor episodes, and I was subjected >to attacks during the cold. I'm not sure why the one would lead to the >other – the experience was also supplemented by laughing as a trigger.

>To be frank, the coughing (and laughing) as inadvertent trigger >concerns me, and suggests that something is obviously amiss – possibly >a tumor.

>

> Can anybody with a brain tumor indicate whether they've experienced >similar 'triggers' in conjunction with the random epidodes?

sci.med.diseases.cancer: Re: Brain Tumor Symptoms?

>
>thanks