

Re: Survival stories

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.diseases.cancer/2005-01/0614.html>

whocares314_at_comcast.net

Date: 01/29/05

Date: 29 Jan 2005 10:53:24 -0800

thank you for the response

i totally understand where your coming from. i guess i failed realise not everyone in this group is a survior and many have lost loved ones to the disease.

if it means anything, ill reveal a little more. my grandmother is not the only one in the family to have died from cancer. my uncle died of a brain tumor when he was 16. i can still see the scars its left in my dad and grandparents.

just last year i lost another family member to ciggarete smoking. he was 66 years old. i remember the experience... trips to the hospital, seeing him... attached to machines, living off them, no longer able to support himself. we chose to let him go. i saw him die in front of my eyes.

i know what its like to go through a loss, and im sorry for not making clear the deep serenity and upmost respect for everyone here who has been through a loss, or has had a fatal disease themselves

Mike