

Mother and Activist, Clare Grady, Sentenced in Federal Court

mothers and children to the recruiting station during the act of civil disobedience that ultimately brought her, almost three years later, into federal court in Binghamton, NY. When Grady attempted to enter the photos as evidence for the jury during her federal trial, the judge denied her submission. But today in court, Judge McAvoy accepted a packet of 102 photographs with the names and ages of New York State military who had died in Iraq from Grady.

Judge Thomas J. McAvoy stated this morning that he feared anarchy would ensue if others followed Grady's example. Prior to pronouncing the court's sentence on her the judge emphasized his duty to protect the public from Grady's unlawful actions.

Grady said, "I go to jail as part of the public discourse about the war in Iraq."

Paul Sayvets, Clare Grady's husband, was joined by dozens of his wife's supporters today. Before being handcuffed, Grady blew kisses to the crowd of family and friends assembled in the courtroom.
