

Re: Where have all the doctors gone?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.diseases.lyme/2004-09/0376.html>

From: A_Weisman (a_weisman_at_yahoo.com)

Date: 09/19/04

Date: 19 Sep 2004 13:11:00 -0700

Tijuana2@webtv.net (V.Jean.G.) wrote in message
news:<25129-414BB823-96@storefull-3171.bay.webtv.net>...

> JWissmille Posts:

>

> Where have all the doctors gone?

> By J.B. Shelle/Correspondent

>

> On her Web site, Lyon describes her daughter's symptoms, which were > mostly neuropsychiatric: "She was paranoid, delusional, psychotic, > suicidal, homicidal, having visual hallucinations, severe confusion, > pain in major and small joints, partially lost vision (could no longer

> read, which she had loved), had severe cognitive regression (which > included being unable to add 1 plus 2, literally, and she knew it) and > suffered with dementia."

> "Everyone understands that Lyme can cause

> a rash and joint pain, but not everyone appreciates that Lyme can cause

> very consistent neurological problems,"

> =====

> =====

> Here again is one of many who DO NOT recollect a tick bite but diagnosed > as Lyme Disease. The daughter's neurological symptoms return as soon as > the antibiotics are stopped. The poor tick is made the scapegoat once > again. The daughter's neurological symptoms will continue to return > until medication is formulated that specifically targets the virus that > has moved to the brain. Antibiotics do help to control the virus but not > strong enough to kill the virus.

>

> V.Jean.G.

This is not a difficult concept. It isn't a virus. IF the symptoms return when antibiotics stop that helps prove it isn't a virus since antibiotics aren't effective against viruses.

You on the other hand may well be a virus.