Have to agree with Kathleen on this if it is about the sham the Bush administration pulled on the American people regarding the WMDs he hoped to find to back up his reasons to go to war with a country that had never entered into aggressive behavior or sponsored terrorism against the USA.

That's what you get when 51% of voters chose a man who had a C+ average in business school (and you have to wonder if he got that minimum passing grade by his work or the family funds and influence). Party on you members of the 51% club. A day of reckoning will come for your poor choice.
