

Re: can Spinal Taps help diagnose Lyme?

Re: can Spinal Taps help diagnose Lyme?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.diseases.lyme/2006-07/msg00099.html>

- From: "john" <john111111_2654spammenott@xxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Wed, 12 Jul 2006 21:02:15 -0400
-

"the 3rd Man" <derdrittemann2003@xxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message

The POINT is...neither you nor KathLOON apparently give a DAMN about anyone else besides yourselves.

You're not here to help others...but to moan and whine and bitch and try to blame all your troubles on others.

You both have absolutely RUINED this board.

You're both pathetic, selfish immature JERKS.

Keep in mind...That this specific Usenet forum has been full of Loons for years now. And its most likely because of the severe , confusing, mental effects that long term Lyme has on the brain. Im not a patient, but my mom was. And I must say... Lyme can turn you into a really , really, strange individual..

Thankfully mom is much better now.. She went to Europe where they know how to treat this illness properly (without meds) and got it out of her system 100%. And this was done 15 years ago and she has NEVER tested positive again for lyme. She had a Dialysis type treatment done where they ran her blood through this machine that would significantly heat up the temperature of her blood and kill off all the bad stuff... and then the blood would be returned to her body.. I do not know the specifics since it was done in Hungary and the language and terms are different over there. But there is a cure out there for this in Europeun countries... Our American Government over here only knows how to treat illnesses with pills.. which helps the economy.

John