Loon...got news for you...that sort of public comment session is usually reserved for the appearance of public input.

Notice that I say "APPEARANCE".

Normally, decisions have already been made.

Only a hopeless naive neophyte rank amateur would think that kind of testimony has ANY impact whatever.

You think that shit is REAL? Good Gawd.

Those that understand the process will sometimes use public comment to lay their objections on the record...

...but anyone who is claiming that their testimony saved the day is just a laughingstock buffoon.

When people like you come in front of the panel...it is time to go behind chambers and take a piss...or have a smoke...

....sometimes both, if you're feeling ambitious.
