Thank you.
See I asked for help for this several times
and the State refused:

If I could have the original link to that, that would be helpful in my case against the State of CT.

I am SICK, asshole.

I will continue to post your own words against you. In August of 1999 the loon wrote the following. It is probably the only honest thing she has ever written on this site.

"I'm a witch. The kids have a miserable life.

I just spent the entire week stuck to the carpet.

The Lyme kids are always miserable. The one who doesn't seem to be sick, causes trouble all the time. The house is an absolute mess. There is no food (milk or bread or fresh food) in the house. The kids have nightmares. We live in a dump. We look like we live like trash from the outside and inside. Then refridgerator door is broken and the whole house smells like the wine vinegar (which probably hadn't been opened in three years) which spilled and I don't have the energy to wash the whole refridgerator...

I ask for help from their father and he ignores me.
(At least he moved back from Kentucky so he can take them on weekends now. First time in 4 years (the youngest is 4 and the oldest is 8).)

I ask for help from the state and they say we aren't dysfunctional enough (I don't have a drug abusing or physically abusive boyfriend who hangs around so I don't fit into any category of need).

I keep forgetting appts. The schools are always yelling at me over this missing paperwork and that.

The kids really don't have a life at all.
I never had the energy to even read to them.

And they'll never become involved in any after school activities. I don't have the energy and resources to participate in anything.

I would say not to involve yourself with kids.

Nothing anyone can tell you will ever prepare you for the amount of work one kid is, even for a Mom who is not sick.

Not a good idea to be a Mom with Lyme.

But if someone had told me when I made the decision I would have not taken their advice. I thought I was tough and had a lot of endurance, because I was an endurance athlete before (and after, for a while) Lyme. And a work-a-holic.

Still, kids are more work than you can ever imagine. With Lyme, you feel like you can't come up for air. Ever.

Sorry to be such a bummer, but I did not do a smart thing, having kids.

I must honestly say I did them no favor by bringing them into MY life."
