Hi, this has been on my mind for sometime now, and I wanted to ask you all a few questions. I have read an article at Eyelid Problems. I was reading about it on medical health care info http://medical-health-care-information.com/encyclopedia/e/Eyelid_Problems.asp which says one of the most common eye problems in older adults is a skin condition called blepharitis. Symptoms of blepharitis include redness, irritation, and scaly skin at the edges of the eyelids. The scales may be dry or greasy. Eyelashes may fall out as well. The cause of blepharitis is not known, but it is more common in people who have dandruff, skin allergies, or eczema, and in those who often have styes. The problem is often chronic..... While it must be true, I wonder what you have to say about it. Do let me know! Regards,
Tom
