Better than the US where 40% are at risk of dying without health benefits.

They stay to do useful but not ridiculously lucrative real research and they go to do lucrative but useless industry marketing research. You can have them.

Specialists that are not needed. You can have them. We, and you, need family doctors, GP's. Specialists are a dime a dozen.

That is hilarious. As opposed to a system that allows doctors to hold their patients hostage and bankrupt them one by one. Doctors and nurses in Canada make a pretty good living here. they are just not multi millionaires who are satisfied with denying health care to forty % of their country men.

No, it outlaws it because the privateers will do what is easiest and most lucrative which will undermine the economics of the system as a whole. And remember, all Canadians have access to health care.

- > A system that healthcare workers are fleeing in the thousands.

Thousands? Not really. Hundreds maybe, and that was a few years ago. That has pretty much gone down to a trickle of the greedier ones. You can have 'em.

> A system that forces Canadians to seek healthcare in the US.

Why would they seek healthcare in the US. It is available free of charge here.

> A system that has abandoned it's hospital facilities to third world status.

That's funny. Last time I looked they were as competent, as well equipped, and as well staffed as any medical offices in the world. Where do you get your information from? What a bunch of right wing propaganda.

> A system that has cut back on diagnostic instruments such as CT's and MRI's > making waiting times in months for cancer patients.

Not in my province. They've just recently acquired several of those instruments.

> A system run by idiotic politicians and corrupt health ministers.

As opposed to greedy corporations and their minions in the Senate and Congress. Six of one, half dozen of the other.

> A system with no accountability and answers to no one.

That is just plain silly. Not to mention wrong.

> The list is endless.

In your fertile imagination, it probably is. When you come back to reality, feel free to visit us and see what is happening in the real world in Canada, where the average life span is longer than in the US and where everyone gets access to a pretty darned good health care system. It's really neat to leave the hospital with a limb in a cast or a newborn child without having had to mortgage the house.

Yep, I just can't wait for the NIH people to advise our people on the right way to milk the taxpayers money into their own pockets.

Who exactly was killed? Give me a name and a city. What an imagination!

We are fully aware of the shortfalls in our health care system. They are routinely discussed in the press and in the House. None of it is hidden.

They are leaders because they do more reseach than any other "scientific" establishment in the world. Too bad it is all a waste of money and scientists time. It's fundamental corruption renders it no more than a sad trough for public money to be sucked out of.
