

Re: the business of carbs or is it the conspiracy or carbs?

Re: the business of carbs or is it the conspiracy or carbs?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.nutrition/2006-06/msg00233.html>

- From: Jim Chinnis <jchinnis@xxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Thu, 15 Jun 2006 15:32:09 GMT
-

"TC" <tunderbar@xxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in part:

NoOption5L@xxxxxxx wrote:

TC wrote:

"The whole carb issue caused a lot of concern in the health-care field – it wasn't viewed as healthy," Brinnehl said. "But I think what it did was get people to think about what kinds of carbs they consumed. I don't know of anyone who wouldn't agree that whole grains are good-for-you carbs."

And this is it in a nutshell.

It's been known for many decades that whole-grains are good for you and refined grains are not/MUCH less so. I'm just amazed that it has taken this many years for whole-grains to finally get their due.

Patrick

Whole grains have only been compared to refined white flour grains. It have never been compared to real food like meats and whole food produce. It is only slightly better than white flour making it a poor food choice in general.

I view grains as a necessary evil. The earth's population has passed the point at which it can live as it did during its evolution, eating "meats and whole food produce." Without the technology and industrial push to improve

Re: the business of carbs or is it the conspiracy or carbs?

Re: the business of carbs or is it the conspiracy or carbs?

grain production and nutritional value, there would be mass starvation.

—

Jim Chinnis Warrenton, Virginia, USA jchinnis@xxxxxxxxxxxxx

.