

Re: A cure for diabetes from 1806?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.nutrition/2007-02/msg00186.html>

- From: spamfree@xxxxxxxxxxx
 - Date: Wed, 07 Feb 2007 15:54:23 +0900
-

On 6 Feb 2007 06:54:40 -0800, "TC" <tunderbar@xxxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

I agree about the cruelty to the animals, but farming has been ever thus. Think of the Europeans stuffing geese to get the fatty livers for their foie gras.

You make it sound as if all Europeans, every single one of them, stuff geese to make foie gras. You see, that is where you start losing people. Making sweeping generalizations that denigrate entire continents of people based on a few people and their poor farming practices.

Your English comprehension is ever poor. Were there no French farmers (eg) who stuffed geese for foie gras? Cos that's all I said. Try reading it again, mouthing the words, and running your finger along the lines of text. Good luck, Dumbo!

And then the crutching (stripping the skin around the backside of sheep to reduce fly blow) without any anaesthetic.

I know of no-one who supports this practise except for those who do it.

I don't care who you don't know. It has no relevance to the fact that farming has been cruel to animals throughout history. And I cited a couple of glaring examples. Get over it.

jack

.