

Burning after sex with new partner

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.prostate.prostatitis/2004-12/0075.html>

---

From: Murphy (ssenniugfotnip_at_aol.com)

Date: 12/26/04

Date: 26 Dec 2004 14:27:11 -0800

I'm a man, I've been monogamous for 17 years. I am recently in a new relationship with a woman and the very first time there was intimacy, there was no penetration, but my penis was in contact with her vagina. 24 hours later – slight burning when urinating, and an urge to urinate constantly. Doctor tested for STDs – negative. Doxycycline cleared it up immediately and I finished the 10 day course of antibiotics. She was tested for STD – negative. We had intercourse approximately 4 days after doxi was done. Almost immediately (within the hour) the symptoms returned. More antibiotics and it cleared again. I had intercourse with my other partner after the initial exposure, and before the antibiotics were started and she has no symptoms of any nature. I have used a condom now for 2 months. A condom broke and the symptoms returned. We are going back to her OB/GYN to talk to him about what could be causing this. My doctor, and a subsequent visit to a urologist have found nothing that indicates I am unhealthy in any way.

Is there a bacteria (I assume it would have to be a bacteria because it reacts to antibiotics) that I could be contracting from her that is causing these symptoms? Would the symptoms show so quickly? Why hasn't my other partner had any symptoms – or could she be asymptomatic? Thank you.