

Re: Do I have Prostatitis?

---

Source: <http://sci.tech--archive.net/Archive/sci.med.prostate.prostatitis/2006-04/msg00004.html>

---

- From: "Razor Face" <razorface@xxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Mon, 03 Apr 2006 10:26:03 GMT
-

"Tommy" <lucky482@xxxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:1143832081.691340.213870@xx

Right now I been using prostaq and some other herbal medicine to see if it will help my condition. I heard it has helped some people. I been using it for about a month now and doesn't seem to help too much. The symptoms are pretty much there. I am going to try using the herbal medicine while avoiding soda, spicy foods, and alcohol. If this doesn't help I will try another treatment source. I'm pretty much going to do whatever it takes to cure my condition. I heard of a prostatitis clinic in tucson that treats with multiple antibiotics and prostate massages. I emailed a few people on the newsgroup that stated they went and most of them said there condition was improved with the treatment. Lots of them were not fully cured but almost all had big improvements.

This is the first I have heard such results from Dr. Polacheck (Tuscon Clinic). Are you sure the people you emailed are for real and not some paid spammers working on his behalf?

I also heard of a treatment that is being tested in ucla medical center about botox injections in the prostate to shrink the prostate. I also heard some people had improvements with this treatment.

Botox has produced good results for some people. But the treatment with which I am familiar injects it in the pelvic muscles (the source of pain for some CPPS patients) not the prostate.

Although I think the tucson clinic might suit me better because I really believe my condition comes from bacterial infection,

Re: Do I have Prostatitis?

since I don't have most of the pain related conditions lots of people

Do you have any positive diagnosis to make that claim? Have you had positive cultures done on your urine or prostate fluid?