

Re: Microsoft OneNote [ignore if you have no interest in philosophizing about how humans organize data]

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.med.transcription/2004-07/2143.html>

From: Joi (thedqsgeek_at_comcast.net)

Date: 07/27/04

Date: 27 Jul 2004 00:53:08 -0700

Mike DeTuri <seemy@webpage.com> wrote in message news:<HuWdnZGbgYInCZjcRVn-pw@adelphia.com>...

> I thought to get the academic price you had to be either a student or a > teacher. If so, isn't it a violation of the license agreement to try to > get around that?

Microsoft has a chart on one of its pages that details eligibility.
Basically any K-12 student or homeschool student, any college student, any faculty member, and any family member of one of those. Probably more people qualify than they think: I never knew just having an elementary/middle/high school student qualified the family for the academic price.

Joi